Alioune Ba was born in 1959 in Bamako, the capital of Mali in the North-Western part of Africa. During his childhood his parents encouraged him to study hard and to finish both primary and secondary school and the importance of education is a topic that has stayed close to his heart ever since.

Working primarily in monochrome, Ba's photographic practice is different from his Malian contemporaries and often described as intimate and poetic. Through the work cataloguing for Musée National du Mali, he often had to focus on minute details to describe the importance of an artefact. This attention to the detail became essential to Ba's oeuvre as he developed his practise. Ba realised that the traditional composition of showing people in full figure, distracted the viewer, who tended to focus on the face or the pose of the person.

In Ba's work here, it is a detail that gets the centre stage, a delicate hand in a white beautiful laced sleeve, a silver ring, a threaded bracelet or the old feet of a gardener.

Since Ba's first exhibition in 1987, the artist's photographic work has been widely and internationally exhibited. His inclusion in the Bamako Biennale in 1994 led to discovery and Ba hereafter went on to exhibit at FNAC Paris and The French Cultural Centre. His work has been included in several literature, including publications by Aperture. Ba works and lives in Bamako, Mali.

Glenn Ibbitson is based in Newcastle Emlyn. He is best known as a realistic figure painter. Experience as a scenic artist, at the BBC and in the film industry, provided opportunities for him to practice trompe-l'oeil techniques on an industrial scale. Such visual subterfuge has guided his subsequent painting activity in a wide range of media.

'Consignment' is a multi-media project in which the compositional device of tightly enclosing the figure within the picture frame's confines is employed to represent human trafficking and extraordinary rendition. The project eventually comprised more than 260 individual works.

The 'Target' series is a response not only to conventional state surveillance [comprehensive CCTV systems employed in the 'free' West] but also to the various methods and algorithms employed by various corporations to analyse an individual's online data and activities, to create a profile which may have profound social and economic consequences unforeseen by that individual.

(Reserve £500 - Others in this series are on sale for up to £1,750 – dimensions approx. 69cm x 56cm)
